A Brother's Envy

Cain was the firstborn son of Adam and Eve, the patriarchs of humanity. From his earliest days, he was overshadowed by his younger brother, Abel, who seemed to possess every virtue that Cain lacked. Abel was gentle, pious, and beloved by God. Cain, on the other hand, was restless, envious, and consumed by a gnawing sense of inadequacy.

As the brothers grew older, their rivalry intensified. Cain became a farmer, while Abel became a shepherd. When the time came to offer sacrifices to God, Abel's offering of the firstborn of his flock was accepted, while Cain's offering of the fruits of his labor was rejected. This rejection fueled Cain's resentment, turning it into a raging inferno of jealousy and hatred.

The First Murder

One fateful day, as the brothers worked in the fields, Cain's envy boiled over. He lured Abel into a secluded area and, in a fit of rage, struck him with a stone, killing him. This act of violence marked the first murder in human history, a primal crime that would forever stain the tapestry of human existence.

God confronted Cain with his crime, but instead of remorse, Cain met his Creator with defiance and evasion. He became a fugitive, cursed by God to wander the earth alone, forever haunted by his guilt and the relentless memory of his brother's blood.
