The Influence of De Stijl and Neoplasticism

Moreno's artistic journey has been deeply influenced by the principles of De Stijl and Neoplasticism, a movement founded by Dutch artist Piet Mondrian in the early 20th century. Neoplasticism sought to strip down art to its essential elements, rejecting the depiction of recognizable objects and emphasizing the use of primary colors and geometric forms. Moreno's work echoes these principles, as he explores the dynamic interplay between color and line to create visually striking compositions that transcend traditional notions of representation.

Color as a Catalyst for Emotion

In Meaningless Neoplasticism, color takes on a central role as a means to evoke emotions and stimulate the viewer's imagination. Moreno's canvases are awash in vibrant hues, from bold reds and yellows to ethereal blues and greens. These colors interact with each other in unexpected and harmonious ways, creating a sense of depth and movement. Through his mastery of color, Moreno invites us to experience the transformative power of abstraction, where the absence of concrete forms allows our minds to roam freely and create our own narratives.

The Search for Meaning in the Meaningless

The title of the collection, Meaningless Neoplasticism, raises a fundamental question: can art truly be meaningful if it does not depict recognizable objects or convey a specific narrative? Moreno's work challenges this notion, suggesting that meaning can be found in the abstract and the non-objective. By stripping away all but the essential elements of art, Moreno invites us to focus on the pure aesthetics of color, line, and form. In doing so, he creates a space for contemplation and introspection, where we can connect with our own emotions and experiences.
